Salena Zito is political reporter and editorial page columnist for the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review. Before joining the newspaper, she worked as a campaign staffer at one time or another for both parties and thus brings a unique perspective to the in and outs of the political process. She writes a weekly political column and was deeply involved in coverage of the 2008 presidential campaign. She has interviewed Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton, Condoleezza Rice, Gen. David Petraus and many other influential national figures. She also has written for the Weekly Standard and The Herald in Glasgow, Scotland. She received the Clarion Award and two Pennsylvania Women Press Club awards. She has appeared regularly as a political analyst on Fox News, CNN, MSNBC, and WABC New York, NPR, and PBS's NewsHour.
